

A. OGUCHI, MD FACP

Dr. Oguchi is an internist and a cardiologist. He graduated from Tokyo Medical University. His postgraduate education included a residency of internal medicine at NTT medical center in Tokyo and a cardiology fellow at Jichi Medical University in Tochigi. Then he served as a university instructor in the division of cardiology at Jichi Medical University.

Dr. Oguchi was awarded research grant from Japan Heart Foundation in 1992 and then he joined the cardiology laboratory of Dr. Russell M. Medford at Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta, Georgia to study vascular biology as a visiting research scientist for two years.

After leaving Jichi Medical University, he worked as a director of the department of internal medicine at Yokohama General Hospital and as a cardiologist at the Center for Preventive Medicine in St. Luke's International Hospital in Tokyo.

Dr. Oguchi founded a medical clinic in Yokohama City to take care of outpatients and of those who suffered from physical difficulties or cancers at terminal stage. His clinical practices supported many patients to stay and complete their own life in their familiar home.

He has been qualified as a Fellow of Japanese Society of Internal Medicine and a Board Certified Member of Japanese Circulation Society for more than twenty years. He also has been elected to Fellowship in the American College of Physicians (FACP) and has accomplished his formal induction as a Fellow at convocation ceremony of ACP Internal Medicine Meeting 2018 held in Earnest N. Morial Convention Center in New Orleans, Louisiana. He has joined the Health and Public Policy Committee in ACP Japan Chapter and has started activities.

He has educated many students from several universities as a Visiting Professor of Showa University School of Medicine.

His most interests are home care and palliative medicine along with life style-mediated diseases such as hypertension, hyperlipidemia, diabetes mellitus, obesity and atherosclerosis.
